US LAWMAKERS PUSH FOR ANSWERS ON RUSSIA TIES

I Amid a deepening crisis over the relationship between President Donald Trump's aides and Russia, some Republicans issued their boldest challenge yet and vowed to get to the bottom of the matter, while Democrats demanded an independent probe. The New York Times reported that phone call records and intercepted calls showed members of Trump's presidential campaign and other Trump associates had repeated contacts with senior Russian intelligence officials in the year before the Nov. 8 election. Republican Trump critics including Sens. John McCain and Lindsey Graham voiced fresh consternation, but comments by Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Bob Corker, who has been a Trump supporter, increased the pressure on the White House. REUTERS

MYSTERY WITNESS TO TESTIFY AGAINST DURST

2 Robert Durst returned to a Los Angeles courtroom on Wednesday to face a prosecution witness whose identity was being kept secret until taking the stand. Durst is charged with first-degree murder in the fatal shooting of a writer and longtime confidante of his, Susan Berman, in December 2000, and prosecutors say the witness fears his or her life may be put in danger by testifying. Berman was found slain in her Los Angeles home not long after police in New York had reopened an investigation into the disappearance and presumed killing of Durst's spouse, Kathleen, two decades earlier. Prosecutors said they suspect Durst killed Berman because of what she knew about his wife's unsolved demise in 1982. The judge has given approval for Wednesday's witness to testify well in advance of the actual trial. REUTERS

PUZDER WITHDRAWS AS LABOR DEPT. NOMINEE

3 Fast-food chain executive Andrew Puzder formally withdrew his name from consideration to be U.S. Secretary of Labor on Wednesday amid mounting concerns he could not win enough Republican support to get confirmed by the U.S. Senate. "After careful consideration and discussions with my family, I am withdrawing my nomination for Secretary of Labor," Puzder said in a statement. "While I won't be serving in the administration, I fully support the president and his highly qualified team." REUTERS

MEETING NETANYAHU, TRUMP BACKS AWAY FROM COMMITMENT TO PALESTINIAN STATE

5 President Donald Trump dropped a U.S. commitment to a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, a longstanding bedrock of Middle East policy, even as he urged Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to curb settlement construction. In the first face-to-face meeting between the two leaders since Trump's victory in the 2016 election, the Republican president backed away from a U.S. embrace of the eventual creation of a Palestinian state, upending a position taken by successive administrations and the international community. "I'm looking at two states and one state, and I like the one both parties like," Trump told a joint news conference with Netanyahu. "I can live with either one." REUTERS GETTY IMAGES

VERIZON CLOSE TO YAHOO DEAL

4 Verizon Communications Inc. is close to a revised deal to buy Yahoo Inc.'s core internet business for $250 million to $350 million less than the original agreed price of $4.83 billion, according to a source briefed on the matter. Since last year, Verizon had been trying to persuade Yahoo to amend the terms of the acquisition agreement to reflect the economic damage from two cyberattacks. A source told Reuters that the deal, which could come as soon as this week, will entail Verizon and Yahoo sharing the liability from potential lawsuits related to the data breaches. Another person familiar with the situation said the price cut was likely to be around $250 million, a figure that Bloomberg reported earlier on Wednesday. Verizon and Yahoo declined to comment. REUTERS

COSTS OF EARLY BALLOTS

Auditor: State should cover early voting costs

Massachusetts cities and towns spent an estimated $720,000 to comply with the state's new early voting law, and the state auditor says the government should be on the hook for the tab.

When Massachusetts introduced early voting for the November general election, the state required all cities and towns to meet certain requirements: offering at least one poll location to be open during business hours for 12 days leading up to Election Day, and offer early voting by mail. Auditor Suzanne Bump said the costs of providing these new services added up to an unfunded mandate.

"The early voting law certainly is to be regarded a success. It did, however, mandate new procedures for clerks. Some of these should be paid for by the state, not municipalities," she said.

State law gives cities and towns recourse when faced with a potential unfunded mandate — they can petition the state auditor to issue a determination. If it is determined an unfunded mandate exists, they can seek exemption from the courts in the absence of funding.

Woburn and Oxford petitioned Bump, who determined some of the early voting costs should be paid for by the state — about $5,400 for Woburn and $1,500 for Oxford.

Bump queried Massachusetts municipalities to find out what the expenses were, making a distinction between required and optional costs.

More than a million people — about 22 percent of Massachusetts' registered voters — voted early.

Lawmakers did offer some grant money to cities and towns when the law was passed in 2014, but Bump said it was insufficient.

Paramedic lies about helping victims of Boston bombing

A photo the paramedic said showed him caring for a victim eventually did him in.

ERIN TIERNAN

A paramedic with the St. Louis Fire Department apologized Tuesday after he lied about helping victims at the scene of the Boston bombing in 2013, according to the department.

Paramedic Shawn Daniel told his supervisors he rushed to help bombing victims after the April 15, 2013, attack that injured hundreds, even going so far as to show them a photo that he claimed was of him caring for a victim.

But after a now-deleted Facebook post went viral, Daniel's story was proved to be a lie.

In a Jan. 18 Facebook post, St. Louis Fire Department praised Daniel as a "hometown hero," a regular feature to introduce department personnel. The post read: "Shawn Daniel was amongst the many emergency responders who ran towards the blast site to assist the injured."

Shortly after the post went public, several members of the first responder community in Boston and New Hampshire questioned whether Daniel was really there.

An internal investigation proved Daniel had lied to the department.

The man in the photo turned out to be a Boston firefighter, who Boston Fire Department spokesman Steve MacDonald said wishes to remain anonymous during an interview with Fox 25.

"It's troubling that a person who is not a member is claiming to be a member," he said.

Daniel issued a statement via the department Tuesday, saying he "apologizes for providing false information, and for bringing undo press and bad publicity onto the department."

The department also apologized to all members of the first responder community who were "rightfully offended" by Daniel's lies.

The department did not indicate what disciplinary action Daniel would face, saying the issue would be dealt with as an "internal personnel matter."

Discrimination still rampant in sharing economy, but researchers are hopeful it will be fixed

By recognizing that racial bias occurs on platforms like Lyft and Airbnb, new startups can work on ways to stop it.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The sharing economy clearly has its benefits, as the large success of services like Uber, Lyft and Airbnb show, but it also bears a shameful blemish: documented discrimination.

Airbnb guests with "distinctively African-American names" are 16 percent less likely to be accepted by a host as an identical guest with a white-sounding name, according to a Harvard Business School study published in September.

A month later, MIT released a study which found that Uber drivers in Boston were more than twice as likely to cancel rides for passengers with "African-American sounding" names, compared to stereotypical "white sounding" names.

The good news, though, is that these companies seem eager to right their wrongs.

Airbnb quickly adopted new rules to fight discrimination by its hosts and launched a new ad campaign during the Super Bowl called #WeAccept. Lyft and Uber also immediately reached out to the MIT researchers, said Chris Knittel, one of the study's authors and an MIT Sloan professor.

Knittel spoke during an MIT Sloan Expert Series on Wednesday about their next steps.

"We have continued conversations with [Uber and Lyft], and we're trying to design follow-up studies to minimize the amount of discrimination occurring," he said. "We're not talking specifics yet, but I can say that the companies understand our research and want to be better."

While no cancellation effect was found by researchers with Lyft in Boston, Knittel noted this does not mean there was no discrimination. Lyft drivers see a user's name before they accept the ride, he said, meaning they can skip a person altogether rather than canceling after they accept the ride. Uber's platform shows a user's name only after the driver accepts the ride.

When asked how sharing economy startups can better reduce racial bias, Knittel said that the fact that this research exists is already helpful.

"First is to be aware of this, and I think Uber, Lyft and Airbnb maybe were caught off guard with the amount of discrimination taking place," he said.

"The research we performed gives new startups a head start on knowing that this is an issue and designing platforms by thinking of ways to limit discrimination."

At Harvard, hip-hop is getting its place in history

The "Classic Crates" project will archive 200 of the most influential hip-hop albums.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metrou.us

Within Harvard's hallowed halls, hip-hop music is being recognized as the art form its admirers have long known it to be.

Harvard researchers are in the process of archiving 200 of the most significant hip-hop albums as part of a project called Classic Crates.

The work will involve assembling and documenting the history of each album, including digital and vinyl recordings, along with information on sample tracks used in some songs and even the liner notes and other information that went into its creation.

Each package will help explain the influence and impact that album has had.

The first four albums in the archives include a tour through 1990s hip-hop along with a representation from the recent past. They are: A Tribe Called Quest's "The Low End Theory" from 1991; Nas' "Illmatic," which appeared three years later; Lauryn Hill's breakout album, "The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill" from 1998; and Kendrick Lamar's "To Pimp a Butterfly," from 2015.

"I think the recognition of hip-hop as a true American artform is something that is not necessarily widely recognized," said Brionna Atkins, a staff member at Harvard's Hip-hop Archive & Research Institute. That, she said, is

Impressions on a masterpiece

A Tribe Called Quest's "The Low End Theory" is one of the four albums first archived in Harvard's Classic Crates project.

Brionna Atkins, a staffer at the school's Hip-hop Archive & Research Institute, cited the album's jazz sampling as "significant." She added adding it can be "traced later to other artists using these techniques and drawing inspiration." One prominent sample on the album uses a Miles Davis track.

"So there's these samples that are from 1980s, 1970s, 1960s that also reference another history and another period," in addition to the period that A Tribe Called Quest represents, Atkins said.

"really a central act of the Classic Crates project ... That it has a significant cultural presence — not just currently, but also how it connects to the past.

The project is on firm ground, with a 2015 study published in the academic journal Royal Society Open Science, counting hip-hop as the most important music genre in our last half-century.

Patrick Douthit, a Harvard fellow, college lecturer and music producer known as 9th Wonder, is the lead curator for the entire 200-album project.

He's working directly alongside Marcyliena Morgan, Harvard professor and director of the Hip-hop Archive and Peter Laurence from the school's Eda Kuhn Loeb Music Library, along with peers in the hip-hop community and Harvard researchers.

Atkins, 22, is a recent Harvard graduate and media coordinator at the Hip-hop Archive. She helps lead the undergraduate research associates, who work directly on the Classic Crates project by filling out the background work that goes into each archival package.

It's a lot of work, Atkins admitted. The archival packages include earlier recorded versions of songs, details on every sample, collected articles and reviews of the albums, music videos and more. But, she added, it's worth it to highlight the importance of these musical marvels.

The archived albums aren't released in order of importance and are not ranked, the staff said, but chosen instead for their overall significance to the form.

Beginning this year, Classic Crates will announce 10 archived albums each year. This year's picks are expected in the fall.

We celebrate progress in every form it takes.

At Boston Children's Hospital, diverse perspectives enrich the lives of our patients and our staff. We honor and celebrate Black History Month and look forward to the minds, hearts, and doors that continue to open for all people.

Trump blasts 'criminal' leaks by intelligence agencies, calls Flynn 'wonderful'

Michael Flynn GETTY IMAGES

President Donald Trump on Wednesday assailed what he said were illegal and "criminal" leaks from U.S. intelligence agencies in the controversy over contacts with Russian officials that forced his national security adviser Michael Flynn to resign.

Speaking at a joint news conference with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Trump called Flynn a "wonderful man" and added: "I think it's very,

"I think it's very, very unfair what's happened to General Flynn, the way he was treated, and the documents and papers that were illegally, I stress that, illegally leaked."

FLYNN'S POST

Sources: Trump offers national security adviser post to Vice Admiral Harward

The Trump administration has offered the job of White House national security adviser, vacated by former U.S. intelligence official Michael Flynn, to Vice Admiral Robert Harward, said two U.S. officials familiar with the matter.

It was not immediately clear if Harward, a former deputy commander of U.S. Central Command who has Navy SEAL combat experience, had accepted the offer, according to sources.

Flynn resigned on Monday after revelations that he had discussed U.S. sanctions on Russia with the Russian ambassador to the United States before President Donald Trump took office.

Losing his national security adviser so soon after taking office is an embarrassment for the new Republican president, who has made national security a top priority.

Harward, a Rhode Island native who went to school in Tehran before the Shah was toppled in 1979, did a tour on the National Security Council under former Republican President George W. Bush, working on counterterrorism. He also has combat experience on SEAL teams and served in Iraq and Afghanistan. REUTERS

The Weeknd's new song puts Justin Bieber on blast

We can all agree that Justin Bieber is kind of all over the place. Especially when it comes to ex-girlfriend Selena Gomez. Ever since rumors started about The Weeknd and Gomez, 24, getting together, Bieber has found a variety of ways to express his displeasure.

According to Elle, he first told everyone who would listen that Gomez was using The Weeknd for publicity. Then he called The Weeknd's music "whack" to the paparazzi. Then he trolled the 26-year-old "Starboy" on his Instagram story this weekend. Because Justin Bieber is 22-years-old and still hasn't learned to have any freaking chill.

During said shenanigans, The Weeknd — real name Abel Tesfaye — was biding his time, waiting for his moment. And then, bam! Tuesday night he announced the release of his latest single "Some Way," with Nav. And it really looks like the song these two co-wrote is all about Tesfaye stealing Gomez from Bieber.

Goodness gracious, these children must be incredibly bored. Mostly, Tesfaye talks about how good he is at sex, and also "I just took that chick, and I know you feelin' some way, oh yeah," which is giggle worthy. No word from Bieber yet, but the controversial pop star did lament his single status on his Instagram story for Valentine's Day. Kids, man.

Yeezy Season 5 was super lowkey

While Yeezy Season 4 was disastrous, with attendees marooned on Roosevelt Island for hours and models actually fainting from the heat, this year's affair was pretty low-maintenance. Either Kanye learned from that mess, or he's taking it easy since his hospitalization. Held at Chelsea's Pier 59, the show only began 25 minutes late and barely lasted a half-hour. The looks featured baggy, oversized sweatshirts, over-the-knee snake-skin boots and the new Yeezy Boost Runners.

In one political-tinged moment, Halima Aden, a Somali-American model, made her NYFW debut wearing a hijab and a long fur coat. Kanye West did not even come out to take a bow at the end. See you next season!

Karlie Kloss is really sorry for posing as a geisha

When you think about the word "diversity," what comes to mind? A white lady dressed up as a geisha? No? That's weird. Because in an attempt to celebrate diversity, Vogue prominently featured Karlie Kloss shot in Japan and styled as, that's right, a geisha. The tone-deaf spread has everything: a sumo wrestler; Kloss with a long black weave tumbling effortlessly down her back; she's even walking down the stairs of a tea house... dressed as a geisha.

The Cut notes that Vogue has a sordid history of publishing culturally insensitive fashion editorials, but it kind of seems like they could have had a better understanding of the word diversity and what it actually encompasses. After the blowback, the 24-year-old model tweeted an apology, writing, "These images appropriate a culture that is not my own and I am truly sorry for participating in a shoot that was not culturally sensitive."

OK, cute apology or whatever. Clearly, baby's been talking to a PR professional. Vogue, unsurprisingly, has yet to respond. But also? How much longer are we going to have to deal with this whitewashing nonsense? It's getting old, man.

Kesha releases emails that prove Dr. Luke is evil

Kesha has released emails she claims were sent to her by real-life villain Dr. Luke, and they are pretty terrifying.

Page Six has the scoop on the emails, which are from 2012. First, in an exchange between Dr. Luke and Kesha's manager, Monica Cornia, regarding Kesha's single "We R Who We R," Dr. Luke says "I don't give a s—t what you want. If you were smart, you would go in and sing it. Also in the exchange, the 43-year-old producer comments about Kesha's weight, calling her a "fat f—king refrigerator," and insisted top songwriters didn't want to give Kesha songs because of her weight.

Here's hoping that these emails help Kesha's long nightmare come to an end.

A Khloe Kardashian ad is under fire for body-shaming young women

Another day, another Kardashian being accused of promoting unattainable body standards. A new Protein World billboard in London is under fire for featuring Khloe Kardashian, Photoshopped to oblivion and selling a 30-day weight loss plan. The ad unironically reads, "Can You Keep Up With A Kardashian?"

Unfortunately, most of us can't. Khloe can barely keep up with herself. It's chill to get all the alleged plastic surgery you want, and to Photoshop yourself whenever the mood strikes, but don't chalk it up to diet and exercise. That's rude. Kardashian hasn't responded to the backlash, and let's be honest: she probably never will. Besides, I have a theory that this controversy is just a master plan to promote her series, "Revenge Body with Khloe Kardashian." Wouldn't put it past her, would you?

Dane DeHaan likes his downtime to be boring

The star of "A Cure for Wellness" wanted to play a character you wouldn't mind seeing beat up.

In "A Cure for Wellness," Dane DeHaan gets locked in a sensory deprivation tank with eels. He gets in a car accident. The villain performs crazy dental surgery on him. It's all in a day's work, says the actor, of "The Place Beyond the Pines" and "Chronicle."

So far DeHaan, 31, has mixed it up, making serious dramas and out-ish blockbusters. In "A Cure for Wellness," he plays Lockhart, a cynical businessman who slowly uncovers a bizarre conspiracy at a creepy spa in the Swiss Alps.

One thing that must have kept this film interesting for you is that your character is kind of a jerk. And he's our hero. I think who Lockhart is in the beginning of the movie isn't necessarily the most likable person. But if he was too likable, you'd just feel bad for him the entire time. I wanted to create a guy you wanted to get a beer with, but you wouldn't mind seeing him get punched in the face.

We place too much value on likable protagonists. Likable protagonists can be pretty overrated. [Laughs] There's a world for the likable protagonist, but you're challenged more as an audience when you have a more complicated person.

Mixing it up

Films like this are a big departure from the dramas you've done, like "The Place Beyond the Pines." If you did just one thing, you'd only be good at that one thing. It's fun to do different things, to be challenged in different ways, flex all the muscles. That's one of the things that's fun about my job.

You do have a fun job. It's really fun, for sure.

I'm sure your life when

I always get irritated when people say, "Well, I just didn't care for the hero."

"I just didn't want to have dinner with them." Well, you weren't having dinner with them. [Laughs]

The scene where they perform experimental dentistry on you is one you're not working is not this fun.

My life is so exciting when I'm working that I almost crave the boring when I'm home. I just want to be on a couch, chilling out with my family. I love doing manual labor: chopping wood, laying stones — very simple tasks, where I'm as boring and off-the-grid as possible.

You live the opposite life of most people.

I get to do so many exciting things. "What did you do at work today?" "I was in a sensory deprivation tank with eels."

of many scenes that looks like it was intense. That was pretty freaky: There's a drill coming towards my face and I couldn't move. There were parts of the car accident that were pretty scary. They had a rig where the car was basically on a rotisserie, and it was flipping the car around.

"FINDING DORY" - NETFLIX INSTANT

So, "Finding Dory" is political now. "Finding Dory." The new Pixar movie. It was the film Donald Trump was watching a few weekends ago while protesters raged against his "Muslim ban" — a nice, animated delight about families being reunited, screened in the White House while real ones were being torn apart outside. We long for a simpler time, when light, funny entertainments — didn't suddenly seem topical. Anyway, of course the Big Cheeto didn't get the messages about how we work better together, how we should look out for each other, how the real villains are heartless systems that keep us apart. So, parents, sit your kiddie in front of this. That way they can learn lessons they certainly won't be getting from the new president of the United States.

"A SEPARATION" - FILMSTRUCK

Speaking of the immigration ban: Among the many Trump hoped to block from entering our country is esteemed filmmaker Ashgar Farhadi, who just happens to hail from Iran. Out of protest, he won't be attending this year's Academy Awards, at which his latest — the excellent "The Salesman," now in theaters — is nominated for Best Foreign-Language Film. Farhadi's one of our finest working filmmakers, so feel free to head to FilmStruck and watch "A Separation," one of his films that already did win an Oscar, back in 2011. An Ibsenesque drama about a divorcing couple that inadvertently almost destroys a low-income family, it betrays its maker as a deep humanist, insightful about how good people can't always control their worst instincts. It's a work of deep, insightful humanism that now seems like a tonic in our crazy world.

NETFLIX INSTANT

It wouldn't be our pick for best film of the aughts — we'd bully for "Zodiac," ourselves — but David Lynch's 2001 mystery-cum-mindf — was named, by a tony BBC poll, the finest piece of cinema from the previous decade. It's a totally worthy pick — one of Lynch's most elusive yet seductive works, not to mention endlessly rewatchable. Originally made as a TV pilot, it was rejiggered as a movie when French financiers came to the rescue, giving Lynch the cash to tack on an ending. He changed nothing of the first two-thirds, and one of the richest ways to watch it is as a TV show, with clear spots for commercial breaks and storylines that will never be resolved, that eventually turns into a wackadoodle movie. Think of it as the best of both worlds.

Warm up this winter at these five live music venues

to do

Inside the brand new Supper Club at Capo in South Boston. PROVIDED

This February, in the words of the irreproachable Jim Morrison: "Set the night on fire."

GORDON DONNELLY
@gord_donnelly
Gordon.Donnelly@metro.us

Enjoy that brief, inexplicable respite from the cold? The January that felt more like April? Yes, global warming is upon us, no matter what you heard in the GOP debates. But it's not yet absolute. February has made that clear.

So where to hunker down, without getting all hygge? Well, if you're like us, you like a little culture with your cozy. The live music at these five venues will get the juices flowing.

Supper Club at Capo

443 W. Broadway
South Boston
Capo's brand-new Supper Club is all swank, and all swing — and the food ain't bad, either. This Metro writer can personally recommend the meatballs and the rigatoni Bolognese to be, unequivocally, very, very good. The Capo Old Fashioned is a fresh take on, well, an old fashioned. And if the music is any indication, this is the spot where if you're feeling particularly like Don Draper on a given evening, you can say, "Give me something big and brown," and they'll actually know what you're talking about. (We saw that weird look you gave us, Bell in Hand.) The well-dressed brass ensemble Beantown Swing Orchestra is no stranger to the Supper Club, and if you want to spin a spritely pseudo-acquaintance to "Strangers in the Night," or get spun, well, you can do that here.

Upcoming acts: Conscious Reggae and Alex MacDougal

THE BEEHIVE, 541 TREMONT ST.

You can't yet call yourself a jazz aficionado, or even a sensual person, if you haven't patronized this South End staple. Whether you're stopping in for brunch, dinner or just a drink, the jazz acts here are consistently evocative, and the live blues is some of the best around. For a cocktail, try their signature: the Queen Bee. Upcoming acts: Kevin Harris Trio, Michael Mayo Band, Noah Preminger

WALLY'S CAFE, 427 MASSACHUSETTS AVE.

Don't let the, shall we say, inauspicious exterior fool you — Wally's is a gem. The sole holdover from an intersection — Mass. Avenue and Columbus — once famous for its jazz offerings, Wally's still brings the heat, from a hole in the wall. You just missed Billie Holiday, but up-and-comers from Berklee and the New England Conservatory fill the void nicely. Upcoming acts: A series of anonymous jam sessions (not a Lemony Snicket spin-off)

DARRYL'S CORNER BAR & KITCHEN, 604 COLUMBUS AVE.

On a South End-heavy list, choose Darryl's for their Southern-style comfort, spice, soul — all that jazz. The jambalaya is highly esteemed, but don't sleep on the Sunday jazz-brunch-buffet. Upcoming acts: Souldelica, Sympli Whitney, Ashley Lewis

THE HARP, 85 CAUSEWAY ST.

If you don't frequent The Harp, it's probably because you're in a relationship with someone you met there, and if so, we think that's wonderful. But for those still looking to "meet" someone, or some-two (three, four ... we don't judge), and who value the role live music plays in facilitating that process, this is a great place for singles. Upcoming acts: JJ Rupp, 7 Day Weekend, Never in Vegas

Conscious Reggae is set to perform at Supper Club at Capo tonight, while Alex MacDougal will follow up on Friday. ALL IMAGES PROVIDED

Get hungry for fermentation nation

Kimchi may be Korea's most famous food, but you'll find it in dishes of every nationality.

MEGAN JOHNSON
letters@metro.us

The average Korean person eats around of 40 pounds of kimchi a year. And while Bostonians certainly love their Korean food (Buk Kyung is a local fave) the fermented cabbage dish has found its way onto menus of all nationalities. Here's a few unexpected places you'll find Korea's fermented favorite:

Keep it light

At The Table at Season to Taste (2447 Mass. Ave. Cambridge), Chef Carl Dooley sends out an amuse bouche of Macomber turnip soup with green apple and kimchi. While it might not sound like the most obvious blend, Dooley likes that hint of surprise. "The kimchi gives an awesome heat and funk to the velvety soup," says Dooley. You'll also find kimchi on the menu in the Table's salad of grilled octopus and shrimp with avocado, chorizo and a kimchi vinaigrette.

Over at RUKA (505 Washington St.) at the Godfrey Hotel, seared bok choy mui is served with a kimchi furikake, rocoto chili butter and mushroom sauce. "Kimchi's fermented nature adds a nice depth to the furikake with its funky flavor and acidity," says RUKA Executive Chef Preston Miller. And at Legal Sea Foods' cool sister, Legal Crossing (558 Washington St.), you can enjoy kimchi muskels with bunashimeji mushrooms and crispy rice noodles ($14).

Heavy duty

Subtle tastes of kimchi are fun and all, but a heavy helping on top of a gooey grilled cheese is even better. At Deadhorse Hill (281 Main St., Worcester) you can feast on the Grilled Kimcheese ($9) a blend of Cabot cheddar and Swiss cheese on crusty sourdough bread with a slathering of house-made kimchi on top for an extra oomph. You'll find the same punch of flavor at the Smoke Shop (1 Kendall Square, Cambridge) where Chef Andy Husbands fuses his love of barbecue with the ment groove going at Back Bar (7 Sanborn Court, Somerville) when you order spicy house sausage, which sits on a potato bun with a dollop of kimchi relish ($10).

At UNI (370 Commonwealth Ave.) Chef Tony Messina fuses kimchi into two unique dishes: the chicken and waffles, a twist on the classic composed of a kinako waffle with kimchi and sancho syrup ($16) and Korean ricecakes with kalbi oxtail, kimchi butter and gremolata ($13). And if you're really willing to blow your diet, head to Copersmith Cafe (40 W. Third St., South Boston) and order the Waimea Bay sandwich, which combines fried spam, fried egg and kimchi aioli on a Hawaiian sweet roll ($7). Don't forget the Tums!

Destinies collide as the career path of a powerful black female sports agent in the predominately white male sports agent industry entangles with an Afro-Latin NBA bound teenage athletic phenomenon from the Brooklyn projects on the verge of basketball fame and glory. Fernanda Coppel paints a searing portrait of ambitious fighting through the odds, calculating sacrifices, and fateful decisions that examines the complex American minefields of race, socioeconomic status, dreams and personal views.

"Last Days of Earth: The Work of Karen Jerzyk"

Karen Jerzyk's photographic portraits have a gothic feel, mostly due to her penchant for staging her scenes in old, abandoned houses. Many are reminiscent of Francesca Woodman's mysterious nudes, but in color instead of black and white, and closer to Lewis Carroll than teenage angst. Creepy and dreamlike, they have a curious, fascinating power, alternately whimsical and chilling. Feb. 18 through March 15 Eridanos Gallery 36 Prospect St., Cambridge Free, culteridanos.com

George Saunders

George Saunders established himself as a master of the short story, but until now he's never released a novel. Want to take a really relaxing trip? Here are your recreational pot destinations.

Fodor's Travel

Colorado

The very first state to legalize recreational marijuana (on Jan. 1, 2014) accumulated more than $70 million in tax revenue in its first year — and already expanded its laws. So not only can anyone in Colorado buy pot, businesses will soon be able to create “cannabis consumption areas” where customers will be allowed smoke up. For now, tourists over the age of 21 can buy up to a quarter-ounce of weed and smoke in private areas such as homes, social clubs, “420-friendly” hotels or by riding in a cannabis tour bus.

Washington

Since July 2014, the Evergreen State has allowed recreational cannabis sales of up to an ounce to locals and tourists alike (aged 21 and up). For non-smokable forms, you can buy up to 16 ounces of marijuana-infused edibles or 72 ounces of beverages. It's only legal to smoke in private areas, and you could face a small fine for smoking on the street.

Massachusetts

As of mid-December, purchase and possession of up to an ounce of weed is legal. But legislators are still tweaking regulations that may alter some of the 2016 ballot-approved initiative, like changing the tax rate for marijuana sales and raising the legal age from 21 to 25. For now, retail dispensaries are still expected to start opening in 2018.

Alaska

Alaskans and tourists have legally lit up since February 2015, though its first retail dispensary, Herbal Outfitters in Valdez, only opened its doors last October. Now adults 21 and up can buy as much as an ounce for recreational use.

Oregon

In 2014, voters approved recreational pot use in Oregon. Today, the state has as many marijuana dispensaries as Starbucks and McDonald's outposts combined. Tourists (over 21) can choose from a wide array of consumer-friendly pot shops, where “budtenders” relay all the salient details about each strain, edible, beverage or concentrate — though it must be consumed in private.

The Denver 420 Rally is the world's largest celebration of cannabis culture; at left, a pot-laced dinner party in Washington state. AP

Maine

Voters approved recreational cannabis in 2016; the new law allows individual possession of up to 2.5 ounces of marijuana, which is more than double the limit in most states. While possession and consumption by adults are legal, licensed dispensaries likely won't open doors until well into 2018.

California

The first state to legalize medical marijuana back in 1996 didn't join the recreational-use party until 2016. And tourists will have to wait until 2018 to actually buy it, when the first retail licenses are issued. If you have a friend who lives there, they can “gift” you up to an ounce.

Nevada

Las Vegas joined the legal weed party in 2016. As of Jan. 1, adults 21 and over can possess up to an ounce of cannabis concentrates, though the first pot dispensaries aren't slated to start opening until January 2018.

Washington, D.C.

D.C. voters legalized recreational marijuana in 2014, but it's tricky: In the city limits, it's legal to possess up to 2 ounces, but technically you can't buy or sell it — you have to find someone to “gift” you up to an ounce.

3 Red Sox players to keep close tabs on during spring training

All eyes will be on Andrew Benintendi, Chris Sale and Pablo Sandoval.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Despite all the snow on the ground right now and the feeling that winter isn't going away anytime soon, the Red Sox will be playing regular season baseball at Fenway Park just 46 days from today. For reference, New Year's Day was just 46 days ago and that doesn't seem all that long ago — so we're getting close to baseball season.

It's difficult to remember a Red Sox season with so much anticipation, as the Sox have the best odds in baseball (along with the defending World Series champion Chicago Cubs) to win this year's title at 9/2 (via Bovada.LV).

Before we get to October and before we even get to Opening Day on Yawkey Way, there is plenty of spring training baseball to be played and the shape of the 2017 Red Sox will be molded. Here are three players to keep close tabs on this spring.

Andrew Benintendi

Sox fans got a brief glimpse of Benintendi's potential last season at the Major League level as the 22-year-old outfielder hit .295 with two homers and 14 RBI in 34 games down the stretch. He also had a memorable home run-robbing catch against Tampa Bay in August when he climbed the left field wall at Tropicana Field and pulled back a ball off the bat of the Rays' Steven Souza.

Benintendi was mentioned in trade rumors this past winter, particularly in the minutes before the Sox executed their blockbuster trade with the White Sox for Chris Sale. Sox boss Dave Dombrowski claims that the Sox were hell-bent on holding onto the young left fielder.

"We never came close to trading him in the wintertime," Dombrowski said this past week. "He's an all-around player. He can hit, I think he has a beautiful swing and will hit with some power and drive the ball. I don't know if he'll be a big power guy, but he'll hit with enough power."

Benintendi is set to make up arguably the best outfield in baseball with Mookie Betts in center and Jackie Bradley Jr. in right.

Chris Sale

Sox fans are salivating at the year Sale could potentially have in 2017, and for good reason. In the past three seasons, Sale posted a sparkling 42-25 win-loss mark and struck out an absurd 715 batters.

ESPN Stats and Info published a story this week regarding how the Red Sox' outstanding defense could lift Sale to even greater heights. In it, ESPN pointed out that Boston was second in the AL in defensive runs saved with 54 last year. The Sox also added the reigning AL Gold Glove winner at first base in Mitch Moreland, so it should be extremely tough for opposing teams to light up the scoreboard during Sale stars this spring and summer.

Of course, there were plenty of glowing remarks regarding David Price a year ago at this time and Price struggled during his first season in Boston. Sale is at least saying all the right things in Fort Myers.

"I have very high expectations for myself," Sale said. "I demand a lot from myself. I don't think it'll be anything different.

I'll be harder on myself than [the media] will. I'm not worried about that."

Pablo Sandoval

The Panda Redemption tour is underway in Florida. Sandoval looks like Channing Tatum compared to what he looked like one year ago, but whether or not a good physique translates to hits remains to be seen.

It's been awhile since the 30-year-old Sandoval was a legit threat at the plate. He hasn't earned an All-Star nod since 2012 and he hasn't finished a season having batted over .300 since that same year. His RBI totals — which were never all that impressive to begin with — have dipped every season since 2013, going from 79 to 73 to 47 in 2015 (his first year in Boston).

As for the starting job at third base, the Red Sox are at least saying that there will be a competition for the spot during spring training. Travis Shaw beat out a beat-up Sandoval in Fort Myers last year, but the Sox wound up trading Shaw this winter. Brock Holt will be the man in charge of pushing Sandoval this spring.

Stevens' profile should get boost at All-Star weekend

Though the Celtics spent much of this season looking up in the standings at the Toronto Raptors, the two teams have gone in different directions as of late.

Going into the All-Star break, the Celtics will hold the No. 2 spot in the Eastern Conference standings, with the Raptors floating somewhere between the third and sixth spot.

That means Brad Stevens is your East All-Star Team head coach. (By rule, Cavaliers head coach Ty Lue can't coach the team two years in a row.)

This can only be seen as good thing for the Boston Celtics organization.

Over three seasons with the Celtics, Stevens has earned the trust and respect of his players, and rarely if ever have you seen any of them show discontent with their leader.

Whether it's in various events leading up to Sunday's All-Star Game, workouts before it starts, a pregame speech, halftime adjustments or in-game plays, Stevens could have a positive effect on a number of these superstar players, and that could pay huge dividends down the road.

Of course we aren't naive enough to think that the coaches and players are going to treat the All-Star Game like a regular season game, but it's still a nice peek into the type of person and coach Stevens is.

And he'll have his hype man Isaiah Thomas with him to do all the actual "recruiting."

We know that Thomas was a little birdie in Al Horford's ear during last year's All-Star weekend. Perhaps he has a few other targets this time around.

LeBron James isn't going anywhere. Neither is Kyrie Irving or Giannis Antetokounmpo. DeMar DeRozan looks pretty set in Toronto, too. But there are superstars in that locker room that for one reason or another may have come up in trade talks already, or could be big free agent targets.

Players like Jimmy Butler, Paul George, Paul Millsap and Kyle Lowry all come to mind.

Aries Express your thoughts and offer suggestions. You will capture interest and impress someone who can influence your future. Partnerships look promising.

Taurus A business meeting will go well if you listen to what's being said. Once you grasp the magnitude of the conversation, add positive, unique suggestions.

Gemini Put everything you've got into getting ahead. Use your intellect to draw attention to what you want to see unfold and you will have a captive audience.

Cancer You'll be torn between professional and personal responsibilities. Look for a unique way to satisfy both yourself and the people counting on you.

Leo Stop contemplating and start engaging in the ventures that excite you. Personal gains, travel and physical indulgence look appealing as well as rewarding.

Virgo Try to stay on course. Falling behind will result in complaints from someone who can be demanding. Put your money in a safe place to avoid overspending.

Libra Look for changes that will make your life better. Evaluate your current situation. Size things up, and figure out how you can attain the happiness you desire.

Scorpio Problems with communication can be expected if you revealed too much information to someone you thought you could trust. Damage control will be necessary.

Sagittarius Get out there and have fun today. Participate in any activity that will align you with like-minded people or valuable colleagues. Be a team player.

Capricorn Stop in your tracks before you make a mistake. Don't follow the leader when you should be the leader. Making impulsive decisions will set you back.

Aquarius A chance to make a financial move is best thought through carefully. Don't let your emotions or romantic partner influence an important decision. You cannot buy love.

Pisces Your luck is changing, and good fortune is heading in your direction. Reconnect with someone you have enjoyed working or playing with in the past. EUGENIA LAST
